Objectives: This course will explore the nature, goals, and methods of biblical archaeology. A survey will be made of the most important sites and finds that have given us a new understanding of the world of the Bible. By the end of the course students will understand: 1. The relation of archaeology to biblical studies. 2. The methods employed by archaeologists in their excavations. 3. The general lines of development of civilization in the Near East from the Bronze Age through the Roman Age.

Textbooks:

Grading:

- 4 Quizzes 20%
- Midterm 25%
- Final 25%
- Term Paper 30%

Term Papers: Each student will choose one topic from the list provided at the end of the syllabus and write a short paper on it (topics not listed may be chosen if prior permission is granted from the instructor). The aim of the paper is to provide a detailed overview of the topic selected.

The papers should be about 6-9 pages in length, excluding bibliography, and be based on at least four sources. Three excellent resources for many papers will be the Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land, The Oxford Encyclopedia of Archaeology in the Near East, and the Anchor Bible Dictionary. But you cannot rely solely on these and should consult some of the books and articles listed in the bibliographies of these works or find others on your own. Each paper is to be printed or typed, not handwritten, with lines double-spaced. Margins for the pages should be 1 inch on all sides and the style should conform with either that of MLA or the Chicago Manual of Style. In the body of the paper you may use either footnotes or endnotes.

Academic Honesty: Each student is expected to do his or her own work. It is absolutely unacceptable to submit someone else’s work as your own. This is plagiarism and will result in a failing grade (F) for the assignment and possible disciplinary action. Thus, when in the course of writing your paper you quote or paraphrase an idea found in one of your sources you must give credit to the original author (usually by means of a footnote).

Academic Conduct: Florida International University is a community dedicated to generating and imparting knowledge through excellent teaching and research, the rigorous and respectful exchange of ideas, and community service. All students should respect the right of others to have an equitable opportunity to learn and honestly demonstrate the quality of their learning. Therefore, all students are expected to adhere to a standard of academic conduct, which demonstrates respect for themselves, their fellow students, and the educational mission of the University. All students are deemed by the University to understand that if they are found responsible for academic misconduct, they will be subject to the Academic Misconduct procedures and sanctions, as outlined in the Student Handbook.

Examinations: Both midterm and final examinations will be a combination of multiple choice, fill in the blank, matching, and short answer questions. If appropriate, essay questions may also be included. The final examination is not cumulative—it covers only material from the second half of the semester.
Extra Credit: You can get extra credit by presenting your paper orally to the class. A satisfactory presentation will raise the grade of your midterm or final exam a third of a letter grade (e.g. a B would become a B+, an A- would become an A, etc). Presentations will be made in the final week of classes and you must arrange your presentation with the instructor at least one week in advance of that.

Attendance: An absolutely essential part of the course! Some material will inevitably be covered in class that is not to be found in the textbook so that each absence negatively affects your ability to do well on the tests.

Syllabus Note on Internet Use in Research: You may cite from the internet in your term papers, but you must be discerning. Anyone can post “information” on the internet, and thus some of what is there is inaccurate, incomplete, and sometimes even blatantly untrue. As in print collections in libraries, only scholarly articles on the internet are acceptable as sources for research papers.

Internet articles should ideally have authors. Some will list individual authors; others will list institutions as sources. The credibility of the information depends on the credibility of the source. Acceptable sources include individual scholars with academic credentials, educational institutions (e.g., Institute of Reformation History, Princeton University), publicly supported national or international institutions (e.g. the World Health Organization or the National Institutes of Health) or other well known institutions with credible reputations (e.g. the World Council of Churches, the Childrens’ Defense Fund). Most educational institutions have addresses which end with the letters “edu.” You must use your judgment since many reputable institutions may not be well known by most students. Also, sometimes websites may list a university as the place from which the material emanates, but which does not sponsor or in any way support the information on that site. (You could set up a website that lists FIU as its origin, and purports that the Pope died last month and was replaced by a ringer!).

There will be some internet sources the reliability of which will be difficult to assess. Sometimes you must judge by the tone and range of an article. If it reads like a magazine or newspaper article and cites none of the sources it used, it is not scholarly. You should ask whether the article demonstrates balance: Does it attempt to tell all sides of the story? Does it ask critical questions of the material it covers? How well does its treatment accord with other treatments of the same material you have found? If you would really like to cite an internet article but have doubts about its acceptability, look up the institution or the author on the internet or in the library. Has the author or institution published any other works? Have those been reviewed or cited by other scholars?

When you cite from the internet, you must list the entire address on the web where you found the information and the date you accessed it. When applicable you must also note any search terms needed within the website to find this particular article when these do not appear within the address.

The following are some bibliographic entries:

Musa, Edward, “The Art of the Maya.”

Zarabozo, Jamaal, “Is Family Planning Allowed in Islam?”
Topics for Papers

Ancient Israel: Location and Excavation of Ai, Hazor, Lachish, Siege Tactics and Ancient Warfare, Excavations on Mt. Ebal, Solomon’s Temple in its Near Eastern Context, Moabite Stone, Assyrian Empire, Hezekiah’s Tunnel and Water Supply in Ancient Jerusalem, Signet Rings and Bullae, Silver Rolls from Kete Hinnom, Elephantine Papyri.
